At home in the City

After one year of teaching as professors at TU Munich there is now a certain interest from inside and outside the school for us to give a statement relating to themes of urbanism and housing. We have chosen to do this by combining our inaugural lecture with other speakers within the format of a symposium. This will allow the public to hear a range of distinct positions from different generations and cultures - relating to our shared "intercultural" teaching at TU.

With the title "at home in the City", we intend to touch on some important issues of living in the city in this century. With a certain agreement towards the continuing relevance of the European city as a qualified model, different themes will be addressed, ranging from urban, typological and spatial to more atmospheric approaches, all of them in correlation to the reality of architecture and city.

Following the symposium a publication will be made.
